Good Progress Made With Legislation—Two Days Spent in Spray Lakes Debate—Public Accounts Shows Province in Healthy Financial Condition

John MacKenzie
Press Gallery

During the past week the Alberta Legislature has made progress with a number of Bills on various subjects.

Spray Lakes Power

In addition the Spray Lakes situation was discussed for two days, resulting finally in the passage on Thursday evening of a resolution stating that the House was of the opinion that the Spray Lakes development would not affect the scenic beauty of Banff National Park; that the increasing demands for power in the Province made it necessary that increased power should be immediately available; and that the Government of Canada should assign to the Province of Alberta the said water power site so that the Province might either develop the site as a public utility or effectually control and regulate the supply of power in the interests of the people.

The Opposition amendment was in practically the same terms, but omitting the declaration that the project would not interfere with the scenic beauty of the park.

Premier Brownlee characterized the time spent on debating this amendment as waste, as the resolution and amendment were so alike that it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to distinguish the difference between them.

The Province's action, said the Premier, in putting forward this resolution, was to ensure that the people of the Province effectually control this development.

He ascribed the delay in getting the project under way to the Dominion Government, which had refused to issue the Province a license, and only on Wednesday he had received a wire from Ottawa stating that the Dominion wished that any application for the development of power in the parks area should be in the hands of parliament itself.

What Province Would Do

The Government was prepared on receipt of a license, to allow the Calgary Power Company to go ahead with the building of a dam at Spray Lakes, and if afterwards the Province decided to operate the scheme as public utility to buy the dam from the company. If, on the other hand, they decided to allow the company to continue, they would be in a position to regulate the development in the interests of the people of the Province. They could not afford to have a private company, deriving its authority from the Dominion.

WINTER SPORTS IN CANADA

Upper—In the Laurentians, Quebec. Lower—Lady Driving Huskies around Banff, B.C. Inset—Skiing at Mont Rolland.

Canadian winter sport enthusiasts feared that the lack of snow would prohibit the usual activities this year in the realm of skiing, snowshoeing, tobogganing and hockey. But "Our Lady of the Snows" lived up to the name bestowed upon her by a brilliant writer, and long before the winter was half through a deep, luxuriously soft white blanket had fallen, clothing trees and rivers and mountains in a popular shade of white.

To the Laurentian mountains in the province of Quebec, flew thousands of city dwellers for joyous holidays at every opportunity. Such swarms of sport lovers were there that the Canadian Pacific Railway provided special coaches for skiers where accommodations were made for skis. At Mont Rolland, Piedmont, St. Marguerite and Shawbridge, resorts were overcrowded.

Once among the picturesque hills and vales of the Laurentians, numerous parties made excursions into the fastnesses of the ghostly forests. Some climbed to the tops of the mountains to see more clearly the marvels of nature's beautiful colors in the heavens. Others, driving along the roads in crammed sleighs, watched the sun, like some golden orb in the distance, roll over slowly on one side as it descended at the end of a gorgeous day to give the world rest in darkness.

At Revelstoke, British Columbia, mountain glissading gained its popularity overnight. A long thin line of hardy enthusiasts would stand at the top of a hill. Then the line would break as they went plunging downward, scattering in all directions, through trees and shrubs, to the road thousands of feet below.

At Banff the Winter Carnival provided thrills for the large number of visitors there. Queen Gabrielle officially opened the Ice Palace, a number of young ladies organized hockey teams while others donned the garb of the Indian guide and learned to drive teams of huskies.

CHAPTER VI Issue Joined

There were dragoon revolvers in the holsters at Woodhull's saddle. He made a rush for a weapon—indeed, the crack of the blow had been so sharp that the nearest men thought a shot had been fired—but swift as was his leap it was not swift enough. The long, lean hand of the bearded Missourian gripped his wrist even as he caught at a pistol grip. He turned a livid face to gaze into a cold and small blue eye.

"No, ye don't Sam!" said the man who was first of those to jump running.

The blank woman stooped behind of Molly Win. Her arm back of the Woodhull around so Banion, who had upon, an' same a now the crowd surged between the two men, voices arose.

"He struck me!" He struck Woodhull. Let me go! He struck me!"

"I know he did," said the inter- venter. "I heard it. I don't know why. But whether it was over the girl or not, we ain't goin' to see the other feller shot down till we know more about hit. Ye can meet—"

"Of course, any time."

Banion was drawing on his glove. The woman had lifted Molly, straightened her clothing

"All blood!" said one. "That saddle horn! What made her ride that critter?"

The Spanish horse stood facing them now, ears forward, his eyes showing through his forelock not so much in anger as in curiosity. The men hustled the two antagon- ists apart.

"Listen, Sam," went on the tall Missourian, still with his grip on Woodhull's wrist. "We'll see ye both fair. Ye've got to fight now in course—that's the law, an' I ain't learned it in the fur trade o' the Rockies fer nothin,' ner have ye people here in the settlements. But I'll tell ye one thing, Sam Woodhull, ef ye make one move afore we-uns tell ye how an' when to make hit, I'll drop ye, shore's my name's Bill Jackson. Ye got to wait, both on ye. We're startin' out an' we kain't stat out like a mob. Take yer time."

"Any time, any way," said Banion simply. "No man can abuse me."

"How'd you gentlemen prefer fer to fight?" inquired the man who had described himself as Bill Jackson, one of the fur brigaders of the Rocky Mountain Comp- any; a man with a reputation of his own in Plains and mountain adventures of hunting, trading, and scouting. "Hit's your ch'ice o' weapons, I reckon, Will. I reckon he challenged you-all."

"I don't care, He'd have no chance on an even break with me, with any sort of weapon, and he knows that."

Jackson cast free his man and ruminated over a chew of plug.

"Hits over a gal," said he at length, judically. "Hit ain't usual; but seein' as the gal don't pick atween men because one's a quicker shot than another but because he's maybe stronger, or something like that, why, how'd knuckle and skull suit you two roosters, best man win and us to see hit fair? Hit's one of ye fer the gal, like enough. But not right now. Wait till we're on the trail and clean o' the law. I heern there's a sheriff round yere some'rs."

"Ill fight him any way he likes, or any way you say," said Banion. "It's not my seeking. I only slapped him because he abused me for doing what he ought to have done. Yes, I rode his horse. If I hadn't that girl would have been killed. It's not his faule that she wasn't. I didn't want he rto ride that horse."

"I don't reckon hit's so much a matter about a hoss as hit is about a gel," said Bill Jackson, sagely. "Ye'll hatter fight. Well then, seein' as hit's about a gal, knuckle an' skull, is that right?"

He cast a glance around this group of other fighting men of a border day. They nodded grave- ly, but with glittering eyes.

"Well then, gentlemen"—and now he stood free of Woodhull—"ye both give word ye'll make no break till we tell ye? I'll say two or three days out?"

"Suits me," said Woodhull savagely. I'll break his neck for him."

"Any time that suits the gen- tleman to break my neck will please me," said Will Banion in- differently. "Say when, friends. Just now I've got to look after my cows. It seems to me that our wagon master might well look aft- er his wagons."

"That sounds!" commented Jack- son. "That sounds! Sam, git about yer business, er yer kain't travel in the Liberty train no- how! An' don't ye make no break in the dark especial, fer we kin track ye anywhere's. Ye'll fight fair fer once—an' ye'll fight."

By now the group massed about these scenes had begun to relax, to spread. Women had Molly in hand as her eyes opened. Jed came up at a run with the mule team and the light wagon from the grove, and they got the girl into the seat with him, nether of them fully cognizant of what had gone in the group of tight-mouth- ed men who now broke apart and sauntered silently back, each to his own wagon.

CHAPTER VII

With the first thin line of pink the coyotes hanging onto the flanks of the great encampment raised their immemorial saluta- tion to the dawn. Their clamor- ings were stilled by a new and sterner voice—the notes of the bugle summoning sleepers of the last night to the duties of the first day. Down the lines from watch to watch passed the Plains com- mand, "Catch up! Catch Up!" It was morning of the jump-off.

Little fires began at the wagon messes or family bivouacs. Men, boys, barefooted girls went out into the dew-wet grass to round up transport stock. A vast confu- sion, a medley of unskilled en- deavor marked the hour. But after an an hour's wait, adjusted to the situation, the next order passed down the line:

"Roll out! Roll out!"

And now the march to Oregon was at last begun! The first dust cut by an ox hoof was set in mo- . . . (Continued on page 6) . . .

THE ALBETA LEGISLATURE

ion, hold such an important site. In that case the Province would have no control.

Hon. C. H. Mitchell and other Opposition speakers spoke. Mr. Mitchell claimed that the Province was responsible for the delay. They should state their intention as to whether they were in favor of public ownership or no.

Messrs Henry and Bowen, of Edmonton were not in favor of the Province developing the site as a public utility. Steam power was cheaper in Edmonton than Spray Lakes power would be, and there were important waterpowers in the north that should also receive consideration if any move for development as a public utility was to be made.

Claims C.P.R. Influence

Alex Moore, Cochrane, said the C. P. R. was behind the Calgary Power Company, as they wished the power to electrify their line through the mountains. Whoever controlled Spray Lakes would control all the power sites on the Bow River.

The resolution was passed by a vote of 35-9, Mrs. McClung and the Independent and Labor members voting with the Government.

The Financial Situation

The public accounts for 1925 were laid on the table Thursday by Hon. R. G. Reid.

They showed the financial situation of the Province to be considerably improved as compared with last year, with a surplus of $188,019.

The total assets of the Province were $162,473,249 and the liabilities, 83,400,190.

The revenue for 1925 was $11,531,025 and the expenditure $11,343,006.

The net bonded debt at the end of December was $79,463,833.

Municipal Legislation

A new Municipal District Act has been before the House this week, and considerable discussion has taken place as to its provisions.

The problem of indigents is a difficult one with some municipalities, and a wish expressed that the Province assume the care of indigents. Hon. R. G. Reid, in reply said that the problem would be how to raise the money. He believed the indigents could be more efficiently, economically and sympathetically handled by local bodies.

The limit of responsibility by municipalities for sick indigents in hospitals was established at $200 per year per patient.

Labor members favored the doing away with the property qualification in municipal elections. They claimed that it was absurd that an individual could be Premier of the Province without a property qualification, and yet could not be municipal councillor.

Hail Insurance Act.

The amendments to the Municipal Hail Insurance Act, dividing the Province into zones with varying rates, and abolishing the the surtax, was adopted with very little discussion.

Northern Railways

During the week a deputation the Cabinet, urging upon them that the Province settle the Royal Bank's claim on the E. D. & B. C. railway without delay, and terminate the present agreement with the C. P. R.

The Premier in reply stated that the Province would not make a settlement on this matter until they were sure that they had made the best deal possible. They had already saved the Province $300,000 by delaying. They were trustees for the whole of the people of the Province, and had to consult their interests as well as those of the people in the north, as the Province had an investment of $35,000,000 in these lines. He could say nothing further at present, but would make a statement before the end of the session.

The oldest ship in the world still in commission was sold recently. She was built in 1800, but is still sound in her timbers.

SHERLOCK LADIES CLUB

A very successful Whist Drive and Dance was held in the school last Friday evening. A good crowd were present and 12 tables were run. After 20 hands had been keenly contested the following result was arrived at.

Ladies 1st Prize, Miss Mary Gray 2nd Mrs. Frank Wright, Booby Mrs. Mathieson.

Gents 1st prize Henry Martin; 2nd P. A. Martin; 3rd E. Luthje.

After supper dancing was indulged in and, as usual, the Mathieson boys furnished first class music.

WORSHIPPERS OF THE SUN GOD

The Chiefs gather for the Dance.

Long ago, under the shadow of the Canadian Pacific Rockies, the western Indians worshipped the sun with strange and barbarous rites. It was the custom of the red man of the plains to bow down in homage each year in worship to the friendly orb that gave him light to see, strength to hunt, power for battle, warmth when he was cold, and in all ways enhanced his progress through the countless ages of his being.

Whole tribes gather together now during the month of midsummer, upon some spot on which the sun shines every moment from sunrise to sunset, to worship and be blessed in the sight of the sun god. An Indian woman, selected by the Head Men of the tribes, embodies the human sacrifice of all those gathered. She sits in the sun dance lodge for four days and four nights and every two hours of this time her head is sprinkled with ashes. The woman does not eat or drink and is guarded by the five highest priests, or witch doctors of the tribe, who sing and chant monotonously all the time. Whistles are blown and tom-toms beaten. All so that the woman should not close her eyes in sleep. The sun-worshippers include the mightiest of the Indian tribes, the Blackfeet, Stonys, Piegiens, and Sar-sees. They have a heritage of noble blood in their veins.

Throughout the ages, despite the apparently civilizing influence of the white man, they have retained their form of worship. Many of these Indians are Christians. They attend regular church services. Many of them are well educated and speak English with a fluency which would astonish the average white man. But in their secret hearts they know, they feel they have been unable to eradicate the beliefs and superstitions in which they were submerged for centuries, before the Canadian Pacific Railway bored its way through the mountains of granite and brought the white man with his superior standards of life.

Once a year the Indians shed the conventional raiment of the white man, which they have adopted, and gather to dance around the camp-fires where offerings are burnt as sacrifices for the favour of the sun god. The Indians break up into groups and sing, chant or make speeches. From all parts of the camp come the sounds of tom-toms, war drums, medicine pipe drums, and many other forms of instruments which the Indian believes will help his cause to receive the blessings of the sun god. As the smoke rises heavenward from the fires, the priests chant weird hymns, their antics become wilder and wilder, their movements faster.

Then, as the darkness breaks and the chill, grey dawn slowly spreads over the scene, all becomes still. The Indians sleep. But they rise at seven or eight o'clock and spend the day preparing for the next night. And so the festivities continue for two weeks.

tion by the whip crack of a bare-footed boy in jeans who had no dream that he one day would rank high in the councils of his state, at the edge of an ocean which no prairie boy ever had envisioned.

The compass finger of the trail leading out from the timber groves, pointed into a sea of green along the valley of the Kaw. The grass, not yet tall enough fully to ripple as it would half a month later, stood waving over the black-burned ground which the semi-civilized Indians had left the fall before. Flowers dotted it, sometimes white like bits of old ivory on the vast rug of spindrift—The pink verbena, the wild indigo, the larkspur and the wild geranium—all woven into a wondrous spangled carpet. At times also appeared the shy buds of the sweet wild rose, loveliest flower of the prairie. Tall resinwoods began to thrust up rankly, banks of sunflowers prepared to fling their yellow banners miles wide. The opulent, inviting land lay in a ceaseless succession of easy undulations, stretching away illimitably to far horizons, "in such exchanging pictures of grace and charm as raised the admiration of even these simple folk to a pitch bordering upon exaltation.

Here lay the West, barbaric, abounding, beautiful. Surely it could mean no harm to any man.

The men lacked experience in column travel, the animals were unruly. The train formation—clumsily trying to conform to the orders of Wingate to travel in four parallel columns—soon lost order. At times the wagons halted to reform. The leaders galloped back and forth, exhorting, adjuring, and restoring little by little a certain system. But they dealt with independent men. On ahead the landscape seemed so wholly free of danger that to most of these the road to the Far West offered no more than a pleasure jaunt. Wingate and his immediate aids were well worn when at mid-afternoon they halted fifteen miles out from Westport.

"What in hell you pulling up so soon for?" demanded Sam Woodhull surlily, riding up from own column, far at the rear, and accosting the train leader. "We can go five miles further, anyhow and maybe ten. We'll never get across in this way."

"This is the very way we will get across," rejoined Wingate. "While I'm captain I'll say when to start and stop. But I've been counting on you, Woodhull, to throw in with me and help me to get things shook down."

"Well, it looks to me ye're purty brash as usual," commented another voice. Bill Jackson came and stood at the captain's side. He had not been far from Woodhull all day long. "Ye're a nacherl damned fool, Sam Woodhull," said he. "Who lected ye fer train captain an' when was it did? If ye don't like the way this train's run go on ahead an' make a train o' yer own, ef that's the way ye feel. Pull out to-night What ye say, Cap?"

"I can't really keep any man from going back or going ahead," replied Wingate. "But I've counted on Woodhull to hold those Liberty wagons together. Any plainsman knows that a little party (Continued on page 7)

The Chateau on the Mile-High Mountain

LAKE LOUISE CANADA

To look down from your window into the clear, tranquil waters of Lake Louise, and see the reflection there of the ice-capped peaks of Mt. Lefroy and Mt. Victoria six miles distant; to look up from your window and see the mountains themselves; to look across into cool, shaded depths of pine and spruce forests—who would not linger near a turquoise blue lake offering these three views as an incentive to getting up in the morning?

And roundabout the Chateau Lake Louise are numberless gorgeous views easily reached on foot, by pony or by motor. The Valley of the Ten Peaks makes an indescribably lovely setting for Moraine Lake, a spot so beautiful that a camp has been built there in order that tourists may linger day after day, only nine miles away from Lake Louise. Paradise Valley has been fittingly named, if paradise itself should be half so beautiful! Consolation Lake, as another delicately cut gem set in the heart of surrounding mountains.

The Chateau Lake Louise stands on a Mountain more than a mile above the world below. Through the windows may be seen millions of yellow, orange and white Iceland poppies, swayed by each mountain breeze, nodding their approval of the scene.

Pigeons Were Postmen in Old Ragusa

Clock and Custom House Ragusa.

Seven hundred years ago, the pigeons of the Free City of Ragusa, in Dalmatia, were postmen. They went across all the seas in boats, travelled with all the caravans, and knew all the routes of the air which brought them back to Ragusa. Like the sailors of Ragusa, they were known in all the ports of the world; as a protection, they were made citizens of the Free City of Ragusa. Any person molesting or insulting a pigeon was therefore guilty of offense against the state, and was brought before the tribunal. Homes were built for these pigeons in the city walls, and the streets and roof tops were theirs. Every man who entered at the city gates was obliged to offer as tribute from his native town two pigeons. These lived in wooden cages labeled with the names of their homes, and crossed with the other pigeons until their turn came to carry out a letter. In this way, Ragusa enlarged its postal system. But the centuries rolled by. Ragusa lost its freedom. Venice usurped its powers on the seas. Battleships steamed up and down the Adriatic. With the other citizens, the pigeons lost their rights and were forced to associate with the sea gulls from Lacroia, an island to the north, sometimes suffering the indignity of begging grain from the birds with whom in the days of their exclusive splendour, they would not associate. Today, the port of Gravosa, Ragusa's harbor, is crowded with ships bearing the new flag of Jugo-Slavia. Passengers from the Empress of France, the Canadian Pacific steamship which next year will add Cattaro and Gravosa ports on its annual Mediterranean cruise, will have a chance to scatter crumbs to the thousands of cooing pigeons still crowding Ragusa's streets and adding to its beauty. The white city, "Bride of the Sea," some poet has called her, would be less beautiful if the iridescent necks of the pigeons did not make small splotches of color on the spotless smooth flagstones and the gray white buildings.

Indian Braves Competed at Banff

Indian reservations in Alberta sent their best and mightiest young men to compete in various contests which were staged at Banff during the Winter Carnival. Immediately on arriving in Banff the young Indian braves put up their wigwams in the middle of the street, unrolled their blankets, and prepared to make themselves at home for a fortnight. The Indian competitions consisted of packing and unpacking food, supplies and clothing, as for hunting or exploring expeditions; shooting with bow and arrow at a fixed mark; and running, jumping and swimming.

takes big risks."
"Since when did you become a plainsman?" scoffed the malcontent, for once forgetting his policy of favor-currying with Wingate in his own surly discontent. He had not been able to speak with Molly all day.
"Well if he ain't a plainsman yet he will be, and I'm one right now, Sam Woodhull." Jackson stoop squarely in front of his superior. "I say he's talkin' sense to man who ain't got no sense I was with Doniphan too. We found ways, huh?"

His straight gaze outfronted the other, who turned and rode back. But that very night eight men covertly instigated or encouraged by Woodhull, their leader, came to headquarters fire with a joint complaint. They demanded places at the head of the column, else would mutiny and go ahead together. They said good mule teams ought not to take the dust of ox wagons.

"What do you say, men?" asked the captain of his aids helplessly. "I'm in favor of letting them go front."
The others nodded silently, looking at one another significantly. Already factions and cliques were beginning.
Woodhull, however, had too much at stake to risk any open friction with the captain of the train. His own seat at the officers' fire was dear to him for it brought him closer to the Wingate wagons, and in sight of Molly Wingate. That young lady did not speak to him all day, but drew close the tilt of her own wagon early after the evening and denied herself to all.
As for Banion he was miles back in camp with his own wagons, which Woodhull had abandoned, and on duty that night with the cattle guard—a herdsman and not a leader of men now. He himself was moody enough when he tied his cape behind his saddle and rode his black horse out into the shadows. He had no knowledge of the fact that the old mountain man, Jackson, wrapped in his blanket, that night instituted a solitary watch all his own.
The hundreds of camp fires of he scattered train, stretched out over five miles of grove and glade at the end of the first undisciplined day, lowered, glowed and faded. They were one day out to Oregon, and weary withal. Soon the individual encampments were silent save for the champ or cough of tethered animals, or the whining of coyotes, prowling in. At the Missouri encampment, last of the train, and that heading the cattle drove, the hardy frontier settlers as was their wont, soon followed the sun to rest.

The night wore on, incredibly slow to the novice watch for the first time now drafted under the prairie law. The sky was faint pink and the shadows lighter when suddenly the dark was streaked by a flash of fire and the silence broken by the crack of a border rifle. Then again and again came the heavier bark of a dragoon revolver, of the sort just then becoming known along the Western marches.
The camp went into confusion. Will Banion, just riding in to take his own belated turn in his blankets, almost ran over the tall form of Bill Jackson, rifle in hand.
"What was it, man?" demanded Banion, "You shooting at a male?"
"No, a man," whispered the other. "He ran this way. Reckon I must have missed. It's hard to draw down into a hindsight in dark an' I jest chanced hit with the pistol. He was runnin' hard."
"Who was he—some thief?"
"Like enough. He was crawling up towards yore wagon. I halted him an' he ran."
"You don't know who he was?"
"No. I'll see his tracks, come day. Go on to bed. I'll set awhile boy."
When dawn came before he had broken his long vigil, Jackson was bending over footmarks in the moister portions of the soil.
"Tall man, young an' tracked clean," he muttered to himself. "Fancy boots, with rather little heels. Shame I done missed him!"
But he said nothing to Banion or anyone else. It was the twentieth time Bill Jackson, one of Sublette's men and a nephew of one of his partners, had crossed the Plains, and the lone hand pleased him best. He instituted his own government for the most part, and had thrown in with this train because that best suited his book, since the old pack trains of the fur trade were now no more. For himself, he planned settlement in Eastern Oregon, a country he once had glimpsed in long-gone beaver days, a dozen years ago. The Eastern settlements had held him long enough, the Army life had been too dull, even with Doniphan.
"I must be gittin' old," he muttered to himself as he turned to a breakfast fire. "Missed—at seventy yard!"

SUCCESSFUL CONCERT
GIVEN BY C.G.I.T. GIRLS

The C.G.I.T. girls gave a very successful concert in the I.O.O.F. Hall on Friday evening March 5. In spite of the inclement weather, there was a goodly crowd in the hall. When the curtain rose for the opening chorus "O Canada!" and the C.G.I.T. song "Skinner-Ma Hinka," the girls presented a very pleasing appearance in the C.G.I.T. uniform of navy-blue bloomers and middies. An interesting display of drill and marching given by the elder girls of the club was an example of the physical part of the program of the C.G.I.T. meetings. A humorous sketch "The New Camera," was given in which the girls acquitted themselves creditably. Character songs, "Three Little Maids from School" in which Mamie Cubitt, Romie Forryan, and Eva Hass made three charming Japanese school girls, and a "Regular Royal Queen," in which Betty Forryan, Jean McSporran, Claire Richardson and Helene Saker admirably showed how they would behave if queens—were well appreciated. Mamie and Wm. Cubitt brought the house down with their humorous duet "Mary and John." Six of the pouter girls gave a pretty exhibition of folk dancing. Arthur Harris, though suffering from a very severe cold, did his best to sing his solo, and is greatly to be commended for his valiant attempt. Enjoyable solos were given by Mesdames Keith and Cubitt, and Mr. Cubitt. The performance concluded with a very unique pageant in which the C.G.I.T. work was portrayed. The tableau at the end of this was a striking one, Special commendation should be given to Elsie Goede and Irene McCrae who took parts Lily Harris should have filled, and had only four days in which to earn them. All the girls missed Lily. The club is indebted to Leonard D'Albertanson for lighting and stage effects. Mrs. Freeman presided at the piano with her usual efficiency, and the results of Mrs. Keith's work as dresser were very apparent when the girls appeared on the platform. During the evening Mrs. McNutt the leader, told of the objects of the club, and the reasons for which the money was being raised. She thanked all who had in any way helped in this good work. An account of the funds raised and expenditure, appears in this issue.
